

How to demonstrate outcomes

Formerly known as the 'Foundation course in monitoring and evaluation'

Duration:
Two days

Includes free publication on self-evaluation

Voluntary organisations exist to make a difference. But learning from our work and demonstrating our achievements can be a challenge. Funders increasingly expect the organisations they fund to demonstrate the difference that they are making. But how do you do this? A practical monitoring and evaluation framework is essential if you are to do this effectively and provide evidence of your outcomes.

What you will learn

You will:

- explore the CES self-evaluation model, which is an aims and objectives model of evaluation with a strong outcomes focus
- consider how to link monitoring and evaluation of outputs and outcomes to the planning and delivery of your organisation's work
- bring your learning together into a self-evaluation framework that will enable you to collect vital information for both internal use and for funders and other stakeholders
- identify critical success factors which will support the implementation of what you have learned.

'Extremely professional and well laid out course. Terminology explained in a clear, easy to process manner.'
